LAST BLOCKHOUSE IS PHOTOGRAPHED

MAJOR MOORHOUSE RE-TURNS FROM SHERIDAN.

Secured Excellent Views of the "Sheridan Blockhouse" on the Grand Ronde Indian Reservation—Last of a Series of Historical Photographs Collected by Major Moorhouse—The Sheridan House May Be Transferred to the Lewis and Clark Fair.

Major Moorhouse has just completed a series of the most important historical photographs ever taken in the west, with the addition of a picture of the Sheridan blockhouse, on the Grand Ronde reservation, to his collection of matchless western pictures.

Accompanied by Historian George H. Himes, the wizard of Oregon story, Major Moorhouse this week visited the Grand Ronde Indian reservation, and secured photographs of "Sheridan's blockhouse," the last remnant of the Indian wars of 1855-6, in that part of Oregon. The house is situated about 15 miles west of Sheridan, Or., and is in a good state of preservation. Excepting the logs resting on the ground, the building is sound and intact. Mr. Himes will make an effort to have it transferred, entire, to the Lewis and Clark fair.

This blockhouse was headquarters for General Phil Sheridan during the Indian wars and was the scene of great activity for the forces of the fighting general.

It is a two-story log house 25x25 in size, provided with numerous port-holes, commanding every point of the compass. In order that the occupants of the fort might ward off an Indian attack from any direction. In order to afford the greatest protection to the occupants, the upper story of the old fort projects about five or six feet beyond the lower story, and by a novel arrangement, the upper story is built so its corners are set in the middle of the lower story, and making eight corners instead of four to the entire building.

This was so arranged that the defenders could, if driven into the upper story, shoot down through the floor of the upper story, and prevent the Indians from approaching or setting fire to the building on the ground.

Other blockhouses photographed by Major Moorhouse are those at Fort Simcoe, Yakima and Chehalis, Wash. This last house at Sheridan is the most important of all of them, because of the association of General Sheridan with it.

One unique feature of the Sheridan blockhouse is that in many of the port-holes in the building were placed old skis, or "thimbles" of wagon axles to form a casing in the hole in the wall. These old "thimbles" are still to be found in the port-holes, just as placed there by the builders of the fort, 50 years ago.

Major Moorhouse hopes to collect sufficient data on these blockhouses to form a historical sketch of this important feature of the early defenses of the Oregon country. Around these houses the Indian wars of 1855-6 raged most furious for in them were stored the scanty supplies of the soldiers and if the Indians could have destroyed these it would have been much easier to drive the soldiers back across the Cascades to the settlements.

IN POLICE COURT.

Unusually Light Docket for the Day After.

The way was so bad for Jim Badroads, an Indian, that even with a plentiful supply of Thanksgiving booze to oil his path he was unable to keep from stumbling and thereby to cross the trail of Marshal Carney. This morning Badroads appeared in the recorder's court to answer to the charge of being drunk on the streets. "Badroads," remarked the court, when the defendant had entered a plea of guilty, "I cannot see my way clear to turn you loose, and I will keep you off the highway for three days. The marshal shall now guide your footsteps along the straight and narrow to the city jail."

Other Thanksgiving offenders punished this morning were Frank King, two days for drunkenness, and P. McDonald, five days for vagrancy.

TWO ARRESTED.

After taking the team and horses, which were left at a hitching rack in this city, Stickler and Franklin drove to Canyon City. The prisoners give no explanation concerning their conduct.

Three touchdowns and three goals kicked. That tells Pendleton's story of the Thanksgiving football game with Baker City. The tale of the visitor is shorter and from their standpoint, much sadder. For with all their coming 176 miles to play and their imposing line-up of husky lads, they couldn't walk past the wheat-raisers for a single score. It was indeed sad, but somehow or other some one had to feel blue when the result

An Evening of Fun.

Del Lawrence was right when he remarked that the "Prince of Liars" was a play without plot or reason. To the largest house of the week the Keiths presented last night their funniest play. It was one long laugh. The specialty numbers, too, were new and amusing. When Lawrence gave an imitation of a woman making her toilet he brought down the house. This evening the Keiths will present "A Fool's Paradise." This is one of Sidney Grundy's famous plays.
